In an interview with Bloody-Disgusting a couple days ago, director Matt Reeves talks a little bit about the much anticipated sequel 'Cloverfield 2'. He says he hasn't even met with J.J. Abrams and Drew Goddard to discuss anything about the film, and even when they do, if they can't all agree on a story worth telling, that the film just won't happen. "Unfortunately, I don't have any [news]," said Reeves. "We're just...you know, somebody was saying to me that I had said something about, 'well, we're gonna try and get the band back together.' And the band is still not back together, we're just still talking about getting back together. But we haven't really had a chance to talk about it. I mean, J.J. is editing 'Super 8' right now, he's got a very, very intense schedule right now that he's working on. And Drew [Goddard] is writing Steven Spielberg's next movie, I
