

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/joshw24/news/?a=28168&t=iGreen_Lantern_A_Troubled_Production_And_Terrible_Movie

An article over at Vulture (a source known to be fairly reliable) have posted a story on Blake Lively and her career, and I couldn't help but spot what both a Hollywood manager and agent had to say when asked about her role in Warner Bros' Green Lantern as well as an interesting bit of info mentioned by the site themselves. And both are also quick to say that should the forthcoming Green Lantern flop (and it's been a troubled production), it won't hurt Lively much. Says the manager, "Whatever the mistakes were with Green Lantern, she needs to not react to them and do an indie movie just because a big superhero movie didn't work. It's always about the role and the director. The hotter the person, the easier it is, and she's very hot right now." The agent adds, "Even though Green Lantern is supposed to be terrible, it doesn't