

The May issue of GC magazine will feature a lingerie wearing Jennifer Lawrence, and for the article GQ caught up with Jennifer's director Matthew Vaughn and they discussed his reasoning for casting her as Mystique in 'X-Men: First Class' as well as why he thinks a lot of young actresses won't make it in the business. "There are a lot of young American actors right now who haven't got any technique," director Matthew Vaughn told GQ. "And to be blunt, a lot of these kids assume that just by having a good set of teeth and t-ts, smiling for the camera's gonna be enough," he explained. "I needed someone who could act." "She's got a set of balls on her," Vaughn says. The May issue of GQ goes on sale April 19th
