

Last week I posted some quotes from a Hero Complex article on Michael Keaton. In the article he was reflecting back on different issues surrounding Tim Burton's Batman. As soon as I posted the article the comments immediately lit up about Keaton or Bale (depending on your point of view) being the best Batman or Bruce Wayne or both (again, depending on your point of view). The topic of Batman's voice in both films also came up relatively quick. Today, HERO COMPLEX posted some more from Keaton on the subject and I thought it was interesting that he covered both of these topics with a fair amount of detail. Below he discusses not only how he approached the character as Bruce Wayne and then Batman, but also how he thought up the voice for Wayne while he was in costume. On obtaining Batman's character through Bruce Wayne... "The coolest thing from the get-go is
