

While the former director of the Iron Man franchise, Jon Favreau, has already revealed that he'd be willing to reprise his role as Happy Hogan in the next installment, Paul Bettany is a little less certain about returning as the robotic assistant of Tony Stark. Here's what he apparently had to say in response to a fan earlier today. "I just bumped into Jon Favreau and I should have asked him that question... I haven't a clue. It's such a peculiar response I've had to that movie 'cause it impacted on my life in practically no way whatsoever. "I get called up about a day before it gets released and they say 'Hey man, we've sort of forgot about J.A.R.V.I.S., should we go and record something?' I go into a recording studio for about an hour and I do my stuff and they write me a check and I go home." Directed by
