Five months away from it's release, the much-skeptical X-Men: First Class film has yet to be advertised, other than interviews with the cast. And while the reason falls behind 20th Century Fox, many have been burning for a teaser trailer, or anything official for the Matthew Vaughn-directed prequel. Well supposedly, Christopher Lee saw the first theatrical trailer, which you can check out it's description below. The trailer opens with the 20th Century Fox logo which pans up as the two spotlight beams cross and form a white "X" on the left of the screen. A white circle goes around the "X" forming the X-Men logo, as Magneto's helmet comes up on the right. Patrick Stewart and Ian McKellan voice over the opening lines about destiny and which side will you stand for as scenes of each in their previous X-Men movie roles flash until the entire screen flashes from white to black.
